In district No. 1 the teachers, Miss Huckins, of Holderness ; and Miss Wyatt, of Rumney, were both inexperienced, having never taught before ; but both attained to a very encouraging degree of success, as to the order maintained, as well as the instruction given. Scholars quiet and studious. School larger, the winter term, than it had been for several years, numbering thirteen.

No. 2. Miss Smith, of Meredith, taught the summer term, is a teacher of excellent attainments, and apt to teach. Order and quiet prevailed in the school-room. Scholars were enlisted in their studies and to a good purpose. Mr. Webster, of Connecticut, teacher of winter school, is young, and this was his first school. He has a fine mind, and is conscientious in the discharge of his duties. His faults were mainly such as would naturally be corrected by increasing years and experience. Scholars generally progressed very well in their studies.

No. 3. Miss Fox, of Woodstock, taught the summer term—a first class teacher—cheerful and familiar with her pupils, yet always with becoming dignity. She preserved the best of order in school, and without much apparent effort on her part. Her method of conducting recitations—where so many of our best teachers fail—was excellent. Her aim seemed to be to have her pupils understand for themselves what they went over. Light gymnastics and singing were practiced in school—a good idea. Scholars generally applied themselves to their studies with commendable earnestness, and made true advance in knowledge. Mr. Miller, of Hanover, taught in the winter, who was evidently qualified, both as regards a knowledge of the branches pursued, and ability to govern ; but for some reason—what, I can not guess—seemed to take but very little interest in the school, and, of course, the school did not attain to any very high degree of merit.

No. 4. This district was fortunate enough to secure teachers for both terms with whose reputation they were well acquainted, —Miss Morrison and Miss Osgood—both having taught in town before—Miss O., the same school last winter. Whether or not they added laurels to their fame, it is presumed that they lost none. Scholars appeared interested in their studies and in subjection to proper authority.

No. 5. The school in this district, when none are absent, numbers seven, was taught by Miss Howe, of Plymouth, her first school; her attainments and executive ability good. Scholars gave evidence of having been well instructed, and their deportment was commendable, and the progress made in their studies creditable to both teacher and scholars.

No. 6. Mr. Merrill had taught in town several terms before, but probably never with better success or with a higher degree of satisfaction to himself. Scholars enthusiastic in their studies, and made excellent improvement, that in reading, penmanship, and map-drawing, deserves special mention. Attention was also given to the development of the physical nature. Heavy gymnastics were practiced by the boys. Vocal music was also taught.

No. 7. Summer term taught by Miss Cochran, of Holderness, a teacher of fair attainments, faithful in the discharge of her duties. She gave general satisfaction. The winter term was the first Miss Swett had ever taught. She seems to possess some of the elements of a good teacher, and met with that degree of success which may encourage her to persevere in the vocation. School, as a whole, not very far advanced; made creditable improvement both terms.

No. 8. Miss Johnson, who taught the summer term, had taught in this district several terms before. There was no diminution of interest or success. Miss Flanders, of Rumney, taught the winter school. The school did not prove quite as successful as was expected; perhaps owing in part to several new scholars entering in the middle of the term, and partly, doubtless, this want of success is chargeable to other causes.

No. 9. The summer term was the third Miss Bartlett had taught in this district. She met with her usual degree of success. Scholars advanced, perhaps, a little faster in their text books than in accurate and practical knowledge of the branches pursued; still, on the whole, appeared very well at the closing examination. The winter term was taught by Miss Bailey, of Rumney, who succeeded admirably in securing the good will of her scholars. School, when visited, was orderly, and gave evidence of having received correct instruction.

No. 10. Miss Avery, of New-Hampton, teacher. Accurate in her knowledge of the branches pursued, thorough in her method of instruction, and she applied herself faithfully to her vocation. At the closing examination, there were present several young visitors from out of the district, who, by their whispering, caused some annoyance ; aside from this, good order prevailed. Scholars prompt in recitation.

No. 11. School was taught by Miss Osgood, who had taught it, with eminent success, several terms before, as she did also this term. Scholars were attentive to their studies, well disposed, and made good progress.

No. 12. During the year there has been built in this district a neat and commodious school-house, which, when the fitting up of the ground is completed, and the fence built, will be an ornament to the place. The style of this house—especially as relates to the clothes rooms—I would commend to the attention of other districts who may be thinking of building. The one term of school is now in session. Miss Chamberlain, of New-Hampton, teacher. She is understood to be giving general satisfaction.

No. 13. A good degree of progress was made by this school under the management of Miss Cochran, both as relates to education and general deportment, better, perhaps, than would be expected by those who know any thing about the school-house.

No. 14. This was a small school, and mostly small scholars, with an enterprising young teacher, Miss Rogers ; her first attempt at teaching. Scholars quiet and orderly, and eager to learn, and made good progress in their studies.

While none of our schools have been perfect, some of them may have fallen but little short of it ; and while no one has been an entire failure, some may have been but little removed from that. It is by no means certain that a school is a good one when the scholars generally speak well of it ; nor is it by any means certain that a school is good for nothing when the scholars speak of it as such. Their judgment is not always to be relied on in these matters. Still, it is no doubt always desirable for a teacher to aim to secure the confidence and good will of his or her scholars. But patrons of a school should form their judgment of the value of a school after personal acquaintance with the teacher and his method of procedure.

Prudential Committees have seemed, generally, to be more desirous than usual to secure competent teachers; in some instances have made great effort to do so. There is a noticeable tendency to employ persons too young for teachers; probably owing partly to the scarcity of older and more experienced ones, and partly because they can be secured at a less price.

In several instances parents have procured for their children different text books than those used in our schools, which has caused confusion in school and annoyance to the teachers. A little care would prevent this evil. Parents might also help to lessen the number of tardy marks and dismissals on the School Register, which, opposite some scholars' names, is unnecessarily large.

The law is assilient about the length of the school week and school month as it is of the school term. If I am correctly informed, the custom in all of our schools, from time immemorial, has been to regard five and a half days a week, and four weeks a month. But of late there has been an effort, on the part of some, to establish a different custom—to shorten the school week, which practically shortens the already too short school term. I find that in some instances, teachers have taught five days in the week and called it a week; in some, five and a half days and called it a week; and in some, six days in the week and called it one and one fifth week. In some instances the teachers have very coolly made this change on their own responsibility; in other instances prudential committees have consented to it. In nearly one half of the schools in town, this winter, five days have been reckoned a week, so far as teaching is concerned, though I believe not so far as boarding the teacher is concerned. In some instances the same teacher taught the summer term five and a half days for a week, and in the winter term only five days. A change which so materially affects our schools should not be allowed to creep in without some good reason. I hardly know what reason is offered for the change by those who would see it effected. I certainly fail to see any sufficient reason for such a change in our common schools; with the higher schools it might be different. If prudential committees desire this new custom to prevail, it may without effort; but if they do not, it may require some effort, on their part, to stem the current already set in, in that direction. I would say that in the statistical table, in this report, five and a half days are regarded a school week, and four such weeks, or twenty-two days, a month.

I would say something about teachers guarding the morals of their pupils, and looking after the school buildings and furniture to prevent their speedy destruction, had I not so frequently alluded to this in former reports, but with so little good result.

The School Registers have generally been correctly kept, so far as I can judge, and have been returned in good order, with one notable exception.

One of the most serious defects I have noticed in our schools, during the year, is in the method of instruction. Some of the teachers, while they seem to understand, tolerably well, the branches they attempt to teach, they do not seem to know how to teach. They do not teach the pupil so that he knows it for himself. Teachers, who themselves have been well taught, of course make the best teachers.

A want which has long been felt, will, I trust, henceforth, be met by the State Normal School, which is soon to be opened at Plymouth. It is expected that there, whatever else teachers may be taught, they will be taught how to teach. I would most earnestly recommend all persons—especially the young and those of little experience—who design to teach in our public schools, to secure to themselves the advantages of this Normal School. Other things being equal, doubtless those who have been through the course at the Normal School will be preferred for teachers, rather than those who have not attended this school.

Respectfully submitted,

QUINCY BLAKELY,

School Committee.

CAMPTON, Feb. 28, 1871.
